Governor's Message

Montpelier, Jan. 7.—Gov. James Hartness this afternoon delivered his inaugural message to the joint assembly in the hall of the house of representatives. Saying that it was impossible at this time to refer to all the major subjects that must be considered during the session, and pointing out that his message would deal primarily with introductory matters, the new governor made an earnest plea for "the best spirit of fellowship and cooperation which, he said, would be the greatest aid to us as we formulate our policies and shape our laws to fit conditions today."

SPECIAL MESSAGES TO FOLLOW

The governor did not read his entire "industry message" but merely a part of it. The complete message in printed form will be placed in the hands of the legislature. Governor Hartness did not outline a legislative program, saying he recognized the true province of the legislature was to add that he would avail himself of the executive's right to present special messages on special subjects as the occasion would require.

His first message is devoted to an application of the law for harmony of co-operation for the general good of the state, to a plea for the use of true business principles and the elimination of waste in administering the state's business, and to a consideration of the worker's place in the scheme of government and of the industrial opportunities in Vermont, and methods of bringing about industrial growth.

Root of North Craftsbury president; F. J. Niles of Derby, vice-president; E. W. Foot of Barton, secretary-treasurer; and an executive committee composed of W. R. Connal of Newport Center, D. G. Speir of Greensboro, F. L. Parlin of Island Pond and C. M. Borland of Glover.

WELCOME WOMEN INTO GOVERNMENT

The opening reference in the message was the fact that this is the first assembly in which a woman has taken part in the legislative process. The governor welcomed women into active participation "in representing our people" saying that "women's coming into full equality in suffrage bodes well for humanity," inasmuch as woman is the most natural and most effective of the home.

WARNS AGAINST SECTIONALISM

Governor Hartness made a strong appeal to the legislators not to permit the influence of sectional ambition to influence the legislative process, which is for the state as a whole. "Our greatest achievement for our home is to be attained by joining with others to accomplish the best results for the whole state and in the submergence of sectional interests," he declared. And again he said: "There is a definite and imperative obligation that holds us to making the best use of our energies. We can accomplish this by team work, cordial relationship, state spirit, faith in each other, tolerance of the view of those with whom we cannot agree, and recognition that every member has some definite knowledge of some one branch that may be of the greatest value. We must recognize that we are here not to obtain special favors for our own section or for several at the expense of the homes of other sections."

MUST ELIMINATE WASTE

Declaring that every dollar wasted is needlessly taken from the people, Governor Hartness urged the adoption of business methods in carrying out the administration of the work of the state. "In expending state funds," he said, "we must keep ever in mind the actual burden which always rests upon the people to raise money. We must know how hard it is for our people to pay the levied, that every dollar wasted is taken from the people who would have otherwise spent it for family needs."

ATTITUDE TOWARD APPOINTMENTS

In this connection he urged continuity in office of those who are fitted. His attitude toward appointments is shown by his statement that "there is no better way to insure good service for the whole state than by placing in office only those specially fitted by experience for the work at hand and after having obtained men of best qualifications, based on natural ability, training and experience, the next thing to do is to retain them in office. He did not believe that the administrative business of the state should be permitted to be adversely affected by the vicissitudes of political disturbance.

In this connection he said that "heads of departments must be in thorough touch with the actual work" and he expressed himself as opposed to the "office holding" type of control that kill off the spirit of initiative." He commended to the "most earnest consideration of the various commissions, boards and officers," saying that reports and recommendations should be given great weight "as the result of close and long application to their problems." These reports, he said, "form the best basis in considering legislative action."

INTEREST OF THE WORKERS

Running all through the government message is the thread of concern for the interests of the workers, manual and mental, in the home, shop, and office. He said the prime responsibility of the government is to the "children, women, and men of the state," and declared that the interest of the workers "must be given the most careful consideration in order to obtain a better basis for understanding so that there will be a government for the people who work their hands as well as those who talk and write."

So far as labor is concerned, Governor Hartness expressed doubt whether it would be fully in the interests of women to limit their hours of work to 48 a week, although this plank in the Republican platform expressed a commendable purpose. He expressed confidence that the legislature will find a way dealing with the subject in a manner that would not
